Dear Virginia,

Greetings of peace.

An experience is not what happens to you but what you make of it. Sunday, September 13, was a living example of people coming together from a variety of professional and cultural backgrounds to discuss and experience a common goal of global cooperation for a peaceful and better world. On a dark and rainy day, the 200 of us gathered together to share common experiences of current realities, must have definitely left the symposium with certain fundamental changes in our personal lives. This was summarized by one of the participants at the conclusion of the symposium when she privately said "the whole world should have been here".

Your significant contribution penetrated and cut across the various security blankets which we normally carry around with ourselves, and touch the common core of every individual present - the heart and soul.

It is therefore on behalf of everyone present that we thank you for your inspiring presence, your support and complete understanding of the purpose of the symposium.

Yours sincerely,
